Estimates given by the auctioneers are intended as a guide only and not as a statement of opinion of value.
4. Terms are for cash, with invoices being due and payable immediately upon receipt and the auctioneers reserve the right to charge interest on any overdue payment on invoices not settled within 30 days of the sale date. If you bid over estimate, chances are that your bids will be reduced. In the case of tie bids - the bid received earliest wins. Bid by lot number. No lots will be broken.
7. A word on Reserves. If a lot is reserved, it will not be in excess of the estimate. Check your bid sheets carefully. The seller cannot assume responsibility for errors made by bidders.

The Artaxiads of Armenia

The Artaxiad Kingdom of Armenia was founded by one Artaxias (or Artashes), the son of Zariadres who was the satrap of the kingdom of Sophene in southern Armenia. Artaxias, at the instigation of Antiochos III of Seleukid Syria, led a successful coup against the Orontid king of Greater Armenia, Orontes IV (212-200 BC). When Antiochos was defeated convincingly by the Romans at Magnesia in 191 BC, Artaxias and Zariadres made the most of the situation by declaring their respective kingdoms independent. This new found status was confirmed in the Roman Senate by the Treaty of Apameia in 188 BC, thus forging an Armenian relationship with Rome which would prove troublesome in future relations with both Syria and Parthia. The Artaxiad kingdom of Armenia would reach its zenith under the rule of Artaxias' grandson, Tigranes II the Great, who would also rule the Seleukid kingdom of Syria for fourteen years. (For more information on the Artaxiads and their coinage see Paul Z. Bedoukian, Coinage of the Artaxiads of Armenia, Royal Numismatic Society Special Publication No. 10 [London, 1978]; available from CNG for a limited time at the special price of $35). The eastern part of the Roman empire had long proved a difficult region to control. In 53 BC, Crassus was killed at Carrhae and Rome had lost its legionary standards. The limits of Roman might were severely tested. Keeping Armenia free from Parthian domination was of great importance to Augustus. When the Armenians asked for Rome's help in ridding them of Artaxes in favor of Tigranes, Augustus sent Tiberius to deal with the matter. As a matter of course, the Armenians themselves removed Artaxes; Tiberius arriving late to be of little aid. However, the Romans, always one to use propaganda to their advantage, treated this 'victory' as a monumental diplomatic triumph. Tiberius "put on a lordly air, especially after sacrifices had been offered up to commemorate the event, as though he had accomplished something by martial prowess." (Dio, liv. 9).

The Kingdom of Cilician Armenia: The Baronial Period: 1080-1198

83. Baron Roupén I. 1080-1095. AE 19mm (2.50 gm). Cross with circular legend (Servant of E...?) / Cross with circular legend (Servant of God?). Bedoukian, Coinage of Cilician Armenia (1979, Revised), 1a variety (legend arrangement). VF. Rare. ($500)

A leading chieftain of the era was Roupén, founder of the Roupénian Dynasty, which ruled Cilicia for nearly three centuries and struck coins on its own bearing Armenian characters for the first time. Roupén established himself in the Cilician mountains circa 1080; he was succeeded by his son, Gosdantín I, in whose time the first wave of Crusaders arrived. The Armenians assisted these crusaders in the siege of Antioch. By the time of Toros I, Armenians were playing important roles in the internal struggles of the Crusaders. They survived many setbacks and managed to consolidate their power by dynastic marriages with leading Crusader families.

84. Baron Toros I. 1100-1123. AE 15mm (2.17 gm). Legend (Toros of the Roupénians) with cross in center / Cross on three legs with legend in lower two quarters (The Cross of Christ Conquers). Bedoukian, Coinage of Cilician Armenia, 2a. Fine. Extremely Rare. ($750)

Note the close similarity of this reverse type to the contemporary coppers of the Byzantine emperor Alexius I and Tancred of Antioch. The distinctive form of the three-legged cross seems individual to Toros I.

85. Baron Levon II. 1187-1199. (Later became King Levon I). AE 24mm (3.75 gm). Knight in armour galloping left, legend around (Levon Servant of God) / Greek cross with annulets at the extremities and crescents in the quarters, legend around (Son of Stephen). Bedoukian, Coinage of Cilician Armenia, 4 variant (missing the banner). Near VF. Very Rare. ($750)

The Armenian Kingdom: 1199-1375

[Arrangement of all coins follows Paul Z. Bedoukian, Coinage of Cilician Armenia (Revised Edition, 1979), available from CNG for a limited time at $40. Bedoukian's reference will be abbreviated below as CCA].

Levon I (1199-1218). On the eve of the Third Crusade, Pope Clement III asked Levon and the Armenian Catholicos, Gregory IV, to extend financial and military help to the arriving crusaders. Levon sent an escort to the armies of the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa who was approaching Cilicia after settling his disputes with the Byzantine Emperor Isaac II Angelus. Frederick had promised Levon a royal crown for his fidelity, but unfortunately he drowned while crossing the Calycadnus near Seleucia. Levon, however, continued to support the crusaders. His army was present at the siege of Akre and he joined Richard the Lionheart in his conquest of Cyprus. For his loyal support, Levon received his royal crown. He was crowned at Tarsus on January 6, 1199 by the Imperial Chancellor Conrad of Hildesheim, under decree from the new Holy Roman Emperor Henry VI and Pope Clement III. Except for the coronation coins, Levon's coins seem to be modelled on the coins of the Emperor Henry VI. The silver coins are called trams. Early on the silver content was very high. Later, these coins were gradually debased to a low silver content, with notable deterioration in execution.

*Coronation issues of Levon I are remarkable for their design as they were struck only by him in celebration of his coronation and the beginning of the Armenian Kingdom. Debate between Bedoukian and Kouyoumdjian has been presented arguing who the obverse figure on the left represents. Bedoukian puts forward that this is a figure of Christ. Kouyoumdjian, we believe, more correctly states that the figure represents the Virgin Orans.*

Levon I left a three year old daughter, Zabel, as his only heir. Struggles for succession by crusader pretenders followed. John of Brienne, King of Jerusalem, claimed priority with his ties to the Roupenians - the pope threatened him with excommunication. Raymond-Roupen seized Tarsus, but was quickly repulsed by the Armenian general Gosdantin. He was put to death. Gosdantin offered Philip, fourth son of Bohemond of Antioch, the throne. He was quickly dethroned in 1224 for looting the treasury. Finally with the consent of the Catholicos (head of the Armenian church) and the barons, Gosdantin married his son Hetoum to Levon's daughter and heir to the throne, Zabel. Hetoum became a capable ruler and his friendship with the Mongols saved the Armenians for a while from the attacks of the Seljugs and the Malmuks.

Levon III was appointed co-ruler in 1301 by Hetoun II before he retired from public life and moved into a monastery. In this period, inter-marriage between Armenian and Crusader nobility became very common. This led to bitter divisions in Armenian society between pro-western factions loyal to the Pope and the Crusader alliance, and nationalists who rejected any deviation from the traditions associated with St. Gregory the Illuminator. It is assumed that Hetoun and Levon were murdered by the Mongol general Pilarghou on behalf of nationalist factions. It should be noted that the coinage of Cilician Armenia suffered considerable debasement and deterioration in style and execution from this point on.

($200)

Oshin was disappointed by his futile efforts to unite the Armenian and Roman churches and chose to pursue a middle ground in order to avoid further bitter controversy. He was plagued by Mamluk invasions between 1316 and 1320. The Armenian armies finally defeated the invaders near the port of Ayas in 1320. Unfortunately, Oshin did not witness this decisive victory having died shortly before. Oshin made a brief attempt to reintroduce the silver tram. However, these scarce silver trams quickly gave way to the more debased takvorin.

Oshin's only son Levon IV, was only ten years old at the time of his father's death. Armenia was ruled by regents. One of these regents, the lord of Gorigos, married off his daughter to Levon. During this period the Armenians were paying huge tributes to the Mamluks, eventually losing the rich port city of Ayas to them in 1337. The loss of Ayas, coupled with the continuing internal religious struggles nearly brought the Armenian Kingdom to an end.

Levon the IV was the last direct descendant of the Roupenian line. He designated as his successor his cousin Guy de Lusignan, Prince of Tyre. Guy arrived from Constantinople with his own contingent of soldiers and was crowned. He was an able soldier who managed to avoid paying tribute to the Mamluks. However, he provoked considerable resentment from the nationalists, when he only surrounded himself with French-speaking courtiers in high positions. In due course he was assassinated.

Within a short period, at the invitation of the nationalists, the Mamluk Emir of Aleppo besieged Levon's capital. Levon held out courageously in the Citadel for several months before capitulating. He and his family were taken prisoner to Egypt. The surrender took place on April 16, 1375, and ended Armenian rule in Cilicia. Levon was released from Egypt and went to Paris where he died in 1393. Ex Larissa Hoard. This type is apparently one of a number of issues struck for Perseus during the Third Macedonian War as payment for mercenaries who required Rhodian coinage. Price has suggested that the Zo... which replaces the Rhodian ethnic on this issue may be the patronymic of the named issuer, Hermias, and indeed we know of a Hermias son of Zoilos at exactly this period, a man who came from Oropos and was Hieromnemon at Delphi in 178 BC. Zoilos himself may also be the same man whose name appears below the portrait of Perseus on his early tetradrachms, and whose monogram continues to appear on Perseus' coinage for much of the period of the full weight issues.

Extremely Rare Set Of Cistophoric Tetradrachms Of The Pergamene Pretender Aristonikos

BMC Lydia -; SNG von Aulock -; Kleiner-Noe PLXXXVIII, 10 (same obverse die - the present specimen, with its shared obverse die to the Kleiner-Noe plate coin but a different reverse die, would seem to indicate that it is an official issue not an ancient imitation as Kleiner speculated). VF+. Extremely Rare and perhaps only the second specimen known. ($1200)

This coin and the next three lots comprise a complete (and extremely rare) set of the four years of the revolt of the Pergamene pretender Eumenes III (Aristonikos) against the Romans from 133-130 BC. These four coins were issued in the Lydian cities of Thyateira and Apollonis. Apollonis was situated northwest of Sardeis, approximately midway between Pergamon and Sardeis, and Thyateira was located on the upper Lykos, east of Apollonis. Eumenes III - Aristonikos financed his revolt against the Romans with the coinage issued by a mobile mint as he occupied Thyateira, then Apollonis and finally Stratonikeia. Aristonikos' revolt was motivated by the will of the last true king of Pergamon, Attalos III; 138-133 BC, who bequeathed the Pergamene kingdom to Rome.

*Much has been written on this unusual gift and logical thought dictates that the scholarly and bookish Attalos recognized that Rome would be the only power able to insure peace and order in Asia Minor. Attalos disliked his subjects and this action made certain that they had no fond memories of him. One of these subjects, Aristonikos, claiming to be a son of Eumenes II by a concubine, decided to lead a revolt against the Romans who were caught unprepared by Attalos' legacy. With the support and aid of the peasants, native tribesmen and the Pergamene upper-class bureaucracy, Aristonikos managed to lead his struggle against Rome for several years before finally being captured and executed by the Roman army at Stratonikeia. The Pergamene kingdom then became the core of the Roman province of Asia. For further reading on this fascinating series of coins see Kleiner-Noe, The Early Cistophoric Coinage (New York, 1977), pp.103-106.*

604. LYDIA, Thyateira. In the name of the Pergamene pretender Eumenes III (Aristonikos). Year 2 of the Revolt (132/131 BC). AR Cistophoric Tetradrachm (12.54 gm). The elusive Nikias apparently seized power in Kos in the late Republican period, perhaps taking advantage of turmoil within the Roman Empire. He is usually dated between about 50 BC and the reign of Augustus, but the only firm evidence for his date is the style of his portrait on his extremely rare bronze coins, which seem to be strongly influenced by the portraiture of Octavian. His coinage, however, has not yet been fully studied, and even the sequence of his mint magistrates has not yet been established.

The following lots illustrate the influence the Athenian "owl" had on eastern coinage. From Egypt to Babylon and from Syria to Arabia the Athenian tetradrachm was either countermarked or imitated for local use. The imitations drifted farther from the prototype over time, and eventually purely local types were produced. These issues were generally replaced by the issues of Alexander after the 4th century BC, but traces of Athenian influence appear in Arabian coinage into the Roman period.

These two coins mark the victories over successive waves of invaders that threatened to dismember the empire in the late 3rd century. Gallienus (not Claudius) had achieved the initial victory over the Goths at Naissus in 268, but Claudius' victories over the Germans at Lake Benacus and the Goths at Mount Gessax shattered the barbarian armies. Ironically, plague swept the weakened hoards, eventually claiming the emperor and much of his army as victims.

Isaac Comnenus, grandnephew of Manuel I, was originally appointed governor of Cilicia, where he was captured by the Armenians and held for ransom. Released in 1184, he obtained forged documents naming him governor of Cyprus, which he soon proclaimed his own kingdom. Ruling with great cruelty, he could not be dislodged until Richard the Lionheart directed his Crusaders against the island. Isaac died three years later, still scheming to reclaim Cyprus, which was never again in Byzantine hands.
